

Acknowledgement

I am much indebted to Professor Dr. Alaka Sarma, my Ph. D supervisor and Dean of Social Science and Humanities, University of Science and Technology, Meghalaya for accepting me as a research scholar. Her patience, encouragement, guidance, valuable suggestions and comments during my research work and after reading many parts of this thesis has been a driving force for successful completion of this theses. Thank you madam for supporting me during all these years of learning.

A special acknowledgement goes to Professor Dr Abu Nasar Saied Ahmed, former Professor at Indian Institute of Technology, Guwahati, who first encouraged me to take up a contemporary and relevant research topic of the government's peace policy in Northeast India and helped me with his valuable advice. I would also like to thank Dr Anuradha Dutta, former Dean and Head of the Department of Political Science, Gauhati University for her suggestions and valuable comments that helped me improve my work.

My special thanks to Mr Wasbir Hussain, Executive Director, Centre for Development and Peace Studies (CDPS), Guwahati who not only helped me in reaching out to significant people and facts but also provided me with valuable suggestions and comments at different points of time.

I express my sincere thanks to all the respondents in my fieldwork who have taken out considerable amount of time from their busy schedule to respond to my queries and interact with me. I thank those government officials, police officers, student leaders, political activists, journalists and academicians who have helped me in some way or other during my study.

I must thank Ms Nilakshi Mahanta of USTM for helping me with the institutional formalities during my Ph. D work. I also thank Mr Arunav Goswami, Research Fellow at CDPS, for going through some of the draft chapters and suggesting certain technical corrections. My thanks are due to Dr Parvin Sultana who teaches Business Administration at USTM for her comments on the case studies of the research.

I am thankful to the library staff of different institutions where I accessed library. This includes the library at University of Science and Technology, Tata Institute of Social Science (Guwahati Campus), the Archive of Assam Secretariat, the library at Assam Secretariat and Gauhati University.

Heartfelt thanks to my husband Mr Rishi Raj Das for his assistance, inspiration and unlimited support to reach the completion of my Ph. D work. My 12-year-old daughter Urshita Das and the 6-year-old Devishi Das too deserve thanks for bearing with my writing work many times when they wanted to spend time with me. I must thank my mother Mrs Bina Pathak for remaining a constant source of inspiration, encouragement and support towards my education and learning.

Rani Pathak Das
(Rani Pathak Das)

Guwahati, 14 September 2017